St Remy de Provence is an ancient town in southern France, and is famous for farm produce, as the birthplace of Nostradamus, and for the asylum where Vincent Van Gogh spent 1 year, after his fight with Gaugin when he famously cut off his ear.

It also hold a bull run annually. 6 Horsemen with staffs lead the charge of the 6 bulls around the streets of St Remy. Most sensible folk stay behind the erected steel barriers, but a foolish few taunt the Bulls or have to take photos. First the cannons roar to mark the first Bull run, and 6 charge around the town.

This series was shot with a FujiFilm XT20.

Then a single entertaining bull is released and he moves around, but with a mind of his own, stopping to admire the view, and then the bystanders, me included.

He comes to admire the barrier I am standing in front of and luckily another foolish young man with orange shoes and red hat distracts him.

Not happy, the bull scrapes his hoof.

A Professional Roper

A professional Bull Horseman, note the crescent shaped hook on top of the pole, a symbol of Trust among the people of this region and the Camargue.

Last round, the bulls are lead around the town a second time. The genius on the right in blue wants to play!

The run ends when all the bulls are loaded up to be taken to the arena for play with some more men. No bull fighting or killing of the bulls here.
